The plan to keep Jobs comeing to washington is noble, However, the risks and disconforts to the people and the environment are not worth it. It is known that lumber and fish are our grate states chief exports and a valu that makes Washington and the northwest unieq. But mineing a pile of coal intended for usage in burning for energy would wind up polutingthe air and watter, killing our trees and/or turning them black with coal dust like it did in England so many years ago. It would kill our fish with the polutants that are produced by coal and turn our area black. →

Not only that but the amount of noise polution caused by trains and oparations to distribute this product would make it very dificult for people to concentrate on work. The Traing would cause trafic buildup and on many ocasions cause workers to be late and/or abscent from their work place. So here lies the big question. Are you makeing more Jobs? Or are You simply takeing work from those that have it and need it.

And on an environmental health area of concern, If the air is paluted and the water is paluted than there will be human and animal health hazerds simply from takeing a straal through town. lung deseases, cancers, and all maner of sickness would become more and more comon. How is that helping anyone in this reagon.

If you really want to help people with jobs than fing a better way because at this rate Im not convinced that This will do any more good.

for the record I am an unimploid citicen of the longview/kelso area and I would never suport something so horid and inconciderate of health and environment.
