Some of the complaints about noise and train tracks proximity greatly confuse me since it I gather in every case the train tracks were there before these people moved there - so basically why is this a great surprise. And some of these towns only exist because of rail commerce. Also earlier this year I was the first car at a rail crossing in Idaho, the train passed in less than five minutes and afterwards I turned on my windshield wipers on a clear 98 degree day and being first car waiting for a coal train - there was ZERO dust. A terminal will be going in, I just hope it provides American not Canadian jobs.
