This proposal, and the fact that it is taken seriously, mystifies & confounds me. I believe there should be an examination of the mental health of the proponents. What do they not get about the prospect of the planet becoming unfit for human habitation within our expected lifetimes? To favor the proliferation of coal burning is to favor holocaust.

Sanity would suggest that the fossil fuel

(Additional space is provided on the back)

industry should now focus its full potential on helping the developing world — including Asia — convert to clean energy. (And of course proceed to do the same with great haste here at home.)

Some religious folks may interpret the end of human life on earth as the Last Judgment of the Lord; my own (Christian) religious tradition calls for care of the planet & its lifeforms as a duty of the faithful.

These coal terminal proposals are ~~not~~ products of sick minds — and ~~not~~ public acceptance of them as "reasonable" suggests the infection is widespread.
